Comment: The wheatsheaf is the very last of some non forgettable venues in oxford city. As a young adult a strongly object to the loss of the venue, not just as a local pub for the public but as landmark of pure history. The wheatsheaf was a venue and pub I dreamed of going to as a teenager before turning the legal age. I have met some of the most beautiful people visiting that place and I can safely say that the wheatsheaf is my safe space where I feel welcome not like a customer but as a friend. I beg that it does not get shut down. The students who live opposite have complained countless time about noise and they even went far enough to remove drinks from outside, if students move above it there is no way the pub will remain open due to noise complaints. There is tons of unused space ALL OVER oxford that is perfect spaces for new student accommodation. It is the last local venue that isn't company owned and it's raised some of the best talent I have ever seen or heard, the memories are too much to loose. The alternative scene has no one really they can go to enjoy themselves on a weekend since the Cellar shut down. I do not want to see this happen to my favourite pub ever!
