

Lawful Development Certificate Application Report

Site: Oakville, Orchard Avenue, Ramsden Bellhouse,

Billericay, CM11 1PH

Client: Stephen & Lesley Readings

Prepared by Mrs. Rebecca Lord MSc MRTPI

Date: 23/11/2021

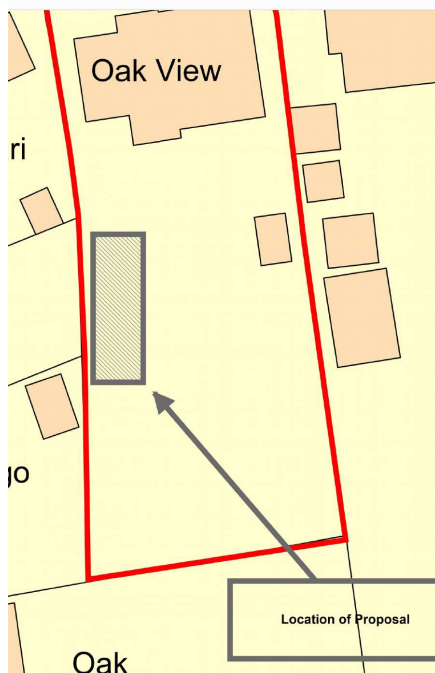

Ref: RL/427

1. Introduction and Preliminary Issues .....	3
2. Assessment .....	6
Operational Development .....	6
Definition of a Caravan .....	7
Proposed Use .....	9
Consideration of an Incidental Use.....	14
3. Conclusion.....	15
List of Appendices .....	15

1. Introduction and Preliminary Issues

- 1.1 This report is submitted in support of an application for a Lawful Development Certificate (LDC) pursuant to S.192 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (as amended).
- 1.2 This application by Stephen and Lesley Readings is made to confirm that the provision of a twin unit mobile home in the garden of their home at Oakville to provide additional accommodation for use by family members would not result in operational development or a material change of use, and as such planning permission is not required.
- 1.3 The property comprises a detached house and gardens. The proposed location for the positioning of the mobile home in the garden is shown cross hatched in black in the block plan extract below. This may be subject to minor variation but the final location within the rear garden is immaterial in the consideration of the application.

- 1.4 The existing vehicle access and main parking area will remain unchanged. No separate vehicle access to the mobile home unit is proposed.
- 1.5 The proposed twin unit mobile home would have maximum external measurements of 17.7m by 6m with a maximum internal floor to ceiling height of 2.96m.
- 1.6 The area of the garden for the siting is level and has a close physical and functional association to the dwelling house. The mobile home unit will sit on a hard standing measuring approximately 18m by 6m and not exceeding 30cm above ground level and will benefit from deemed consent pursuant to Schedule 2, Part 1, Class F of the Town and Country Planning

(General Permitted Development) Order 2015. As it will not be located between the principal elevation of the house and the highway, it does not need to be made of porous materials.

- 1.7 The dwelling house and its occupation by the applicants is lawful. There are no known planning enforcement notices, planning conditions or Article 4 Directions to prohibits the provision of a twin unit mobile home for use as additional accommodation at the property.
- 1.8 A previous application for full planning permission, reference 20/01401/FULL, was refused. However that proposal was for a built structure 22.26 metres long by 8.257 metres wide, by 5.85 metres high with a hipped tiled roof with a 2.2 metre wide porch/glazed link attaching it to the rear of the house behind the attached garage. The decision, which was based on planning policy, has no bearing on the current LDC application before the Council, as it is an entirely different proposition, and any assessment must be based purely on matters of planning law.
- 1.9 An application for a LDC, reference 21/00101/LDCP, to establish the lawfulness of a proposed outbuilding (17.4m by 7.6m) for use as a gym with changing rooms garden room and store, was also refused on the basis that no supporting evidence had been submitted on behalf of the applicant to justify that the proposed building is 'genuinely & reasonably' required. The scale of the proposed building remains unjustified and therefore on the balance of probabilities the building does not constitute 'permitted development. This decision is distinguished from the current application, in that apart from a proposed hard surface no lawfulness is sought on the basis of deemed consent.
- 1.10 A second LDC application, reference 21/00695/LDCP, was made to establish the lawfulness of a proposed outbuilding (17.4m by 7.6m) in rear garden for use as a gym, home office, garden room and store. This was refused on the basis that the supporting evidence submitted on behalf of the applicant within a Planning Statement to justify that the proposed building is 'genuinely and reasonably' required was not accepted as the uses proposed in the statement are inconsistent with those indicated upon the floor plans which include rooms which appear oversized or undesignated. The scale of the proposed building remains unjustified and therefore on the balance of probabilities the building does not constitute 'permitted development'. This decision is distinguished from the current application, in that apart from a proposed hard surface no lawfulness is sought on the basis of deemed consent. The proposed twin unit mobile home will provide accommodation that is integral / the same as to the primary residential use rather than ancillary.
- 1.11 It will be demonstrated in this report and accompanying documents that the twin unit mobile home is a caravan within the legal definition, and therefore it is not a building. Further that the proposed use as additional accommodation by one household within a single residential planning unit occupied by one family would not result in a material change of use. As such planning permission is not required for either the siting of the mobile home on the land or the use as proposed.

- 1.12 Although it is generally accepted by other Councils and Planning Inspectors that a hard standing as proposed would benefit from deemed consent, in the event that the Local Planning Authority (LPA) is not content that the proposed hard surface is incidental to the lawful residential use, the proposed twin unit mobile home would alternatively sit on pad stones, which are de minimis and are not therefore development within Section 55 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. It is of course open to the LPA to issue a split decision if this is their conclusion.
- 1.13 No Caravan Site Licence is required for the mobile home as proposed.

2. Assessment

2.1 The judgment in Gabbittas v SSE & Newham LBC [1985] JPL 630 makes it clear that if the local planning authority has no evidence of its own, or from others, to contradict or otherwise make the Appellant's version of events less than probable, there is no good reason not to grant a LDC, provided the Appellant's evidence is sufficiently precise and unambiguous.

2.2 In making the assessment of the proposal the following matters need to be addressed:

- Does the proposal comprise operational development?
- Is the mobile home unit a caravan within the legal definition?
- Is the proposed use consistent with the lawful use of the land or does it give rise to a material change of use?

Operational Development

2.3 Section 55 1A) of the Act defines development as including 'operations normally undertaken by a person carrying on a business as a builder.

2.4 The proposed mobile unit will not be constructed by a builder, and there is no intention to physically attach the unit to the land. The Courts have long held that connections to utilities do not amount to attachment as detachment from such services is a simple matter which can be achieved within minutes.

2.5 In the case of Measor v SSETR [1999] JPL 182 the Deputy Judge said that whilst he would be wary of holding, as a matter of law, that a 'structure' which satisfies the definition of, for example, a caravan under section 13 could never be a 'building' for the purpose of the 1990 Act as amended, he also found that a caravan would not generally satisfy the well-established definition of a building, having regard to factors of permanence and attachment. Indeed, it would be contrary to the purposes of the 1990 Act as amended to hold that because caravans were defined as 'structures' in the 1960 Act they fell within the definition of 'building' in the 1990 Act. It can therefore be concluded that compliance with the definition of a 'caravan' is a useful indicator of whether operational development would be taking place.

2.6 Regarding the issue of permanence, the unit is required to meet the need for additional accommodation for the family as explained in the following subsection on use. The length of time the mobile home unit is required cannot be specified beyond this. Nonetheless it is not intended to be a permanent addition to the land and can be readily simply removed once it is no longer needed.

2.7 Also, whilst a unit of this kind cannot be moved around with the same ease as a touring caravan for instance the same can be said for 'static' caravans and mobile homes located on residential caravan sites. Such units are not readily transportable without the aid of cranes or lorries yet are recognised in law as caravans not amounting to buildings. The issues regarding mobility of the unit are examined in the following sub section.

- 2.8 In addition, the appeal decision produced in Appendix 8 examines the 2012 'Woolley Chickens' case concerning the interpretation of a building. This concludes that the case law, which concerned poultry units, is distinguishable from the consideration of a LDC application for a caravan, as there was no need to consider the statutory definition of a caravan (paragraph 24.) which has greater weight in the determination. It was concluded that the mobile home was a caravan and not a building.

Definition of a Caravan

- 2.9 A caravan is defined in Section 29 of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 as any structure designed or adapted for human habitation which is capable of being moved from one place to another (whether by being towed, or by being transported on a motor vehicle or trailer) and any other motor vehicle so designed or adapted, but does not include a) any railway rolling stock which is for the time being on rails forming part of a railway system, or b) any tent.
- 2.10 Section 13 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 extends the definition of caravan to include twin unit caravans, which must be (in order to meet the expanded definition) composed of not more than two sections, constructed, or designed to be assembled on site by means of bolts, clamps, or other devices, and should not exceed 60 feet in length, 20 feet in width and 10 feet in height overall (size later changed see below).
- 2.11 The size limitation of caravans as originally set out in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 was updated through The Caravan Sites Act 1968 and Social Landlords (Permissible Additional Purposes) (England) Order 2006 (Definition of Caravan) (Amendment) (England) Order 2006. The Order introduced the following maximum dimensions:
- Length (exclusive of any drawbar): 20 metres (65.616 feet)
  - Width: 6.8 metres (23.309 feet)
  - Height measured internally from the floor at the lowest level to the ceiling at the highest level: 3.05 metres (10.006 feet).
- 2.12 The dimensions of the proposed twin unit mobile home (see para 1.5) do not exceed these size limitations.
- 2.13 Due to the restricted access to the property the twin unit mobile home unit is designed to be assembled in two parts (as shown in the floor plan) on site with the joining of these together by means of bolts, clamps, or other devices as the final act of assembly. The manufacturer confirms that once completed the proposed mobile home will be capable of being moved as one unit and therefore it conforms with the mobility test. The usual method for transportation by road is to lift the mobile home unit onto a flatbed lorry using a crane.
- 2.14 The mobile home need not have direct access to a road to be deemed a caravan, it must simply be capable of being moved in terms of its structural integrity. This transportability is confirmed by the manufacture in Appendix 2.

- 2.15 It is common practice to build or assemble caravans in hard to access back gardens. In Byrne v SSE and Arun DC QED 1997 concerning a twin unit mobile home it was found that the two parts need not be identifiable as caravans or capable of human habitation individually, only that the two parts should be separately constructed and then joined together.
- 2.16 The assembly of a caravan unit on site also complies with the construction tests as discussed in the extract of the appeal decision APP/N1025/C/01/1074589 (Erewash Borough Council). A full copy is produced in Appendix 1.

The construction test

5. The local planning authority draws my attention to the analysis of the meaning of the words 'composed of not more than two sections separately constructed and designed to be assembled on a site by means of bolts, clamps or other devices' which was given in Byrne v SSE and Arun DC, QBD 1997. There is no requirement for the 2 sections to be each identifiable as caravans, or capable of habitation, before they are joined together. However, it was found that it was an 'essential part of the construction process in order to bring a structure which would not otherwise be a caravan, within the definition of that which is deemed to be a caravan, that there should be two sections separately constructed which are then designed to be assembled on a site..... If the process of construction was not by the creation of two separately constructed sections then joined together, the terms of the paragraph [section 13(1)(a) of the Caravan Sites Act 1968] are not satisfied'. They were not in that case because the log cabin concerned, composed of individual timbers clamped together as in that before me, had not at any time been composed of 2 separately constructed sections which were then joined together on the site.
6. That was not so in the case before me. Though the Park Home was delivered by lorry in many pieces I see no requirement in section 13(1)(a) that the process of creating the 2 separate sections must take place away from the site on which they are then joined together. It is necessary only that the act of joining the 2 sections together should be the final act of assembly. The appellant's evidence and photographs taken during the process of assembly demonstrate that the 2 sections, split at the base and ridge and each with a separate ridge beam, were constructed separately. The appellant was clear on this point. His evidence as to the facts of the matter was not disputed. In my opinion the process of construction fulfilled the test of section 13(1)(a).

- 2.17 It is important to note that in this decision it is confirmed that there is no requirement in S.13(1)(a) that the creation, or manufacture of the two parts of a twin unit mobile home need take place elsewhere.
- 2.18 A certificate of compliance with the legislative limitations that has been provided by the supplier is produced at Appendix 2. It should be noted that this is signed by a chartered engineer on behalf of the manufacturer / supplier in the full knowledge of the penalties for providing false or misleading information in seeking a LDC. This must be given significant weight in the assessment.
- 2.19 On the information provided it can be concluded that the proposed mobile home unit:
- conforms to all the size and constructional and mobility criteria of the legal definition of a caravan,
  - that is not proposed to be physically attached to the land, and
  - It is not a permanent building (as noted in the preceding section)

Therefore, the provision of the proposed unit on the land would not result in operational development.

Proposed Use

- 2.20 The application site is a two storey five bedroom single dwelling house with gardens. This comprises one residential planning unit with no planning restrictions on occupation. The issue of 'curtilage' is not relevant to the assessment as the provision of a caravan a land use and permitted development rights are not being considered in this respect.
- 2.21 The main house is currently occupied by the applicants who are in their 70s, their son Mark Readings, daughter in law Julianne Readings, and their three grandsons ages, 10, 18 and 21. The proposed mobile home unit will provide level access for the residents of the main house to additional living accommodation, including a home office, leisure room, bathroom, and kitchenette.
- 2.22 The floor plans of the twin unit mobile home do not assign uses to spaces as a mobile home within the legal size limitation of 20m by 6.8m could comprise one large space or any number of smaller spaces, without taking it out of the legal definition of a caravan. The caravan simply needs to be designed for human habitation, which the proposed is.
- 2.23 Whilst it is not proposed that any family member will sleep in the mobile home, as it is designed for human habitation in accordance with the legal definition of a caravan it could be used as overflow bedroom accommodation for family members as part of one household if required without there being any material change of use.
- 2.24 The facts of the proposed use are as follows:
1. The mobile home unit will not be physically separated from the rest of the garden of the main dwelling.
  2. The garden and mobile home accommodation will be shared by the occupants of the main house.
  3. No separate services are proposed, there will be one household electricity and water bill.
  4. There would be no separate postal address.
  5. The proposed mobile home unit will provide additional residential accommodation for the occupants of the main house and will have limited kitchenette facilities for the preparation of hot drinks, and snacks.
  6. All main meals will be taken by the family in the main house.
  7. All residents of the property will have access to the main house and additional accommodation provided by the proposed mobile home.
- 2.25 The assessment of a planning unit and the relevant three tests is set out in the leading case of Burdle v Secretary of State for the Environment (1972):
1. Where it is possible to recognise a single main purpose of the occupier's use of his land to which secondary activities were incidental or ancillary, the whole unit of occupation should be considered as the planning unit.

2. Secondly however, it may be apt to consider the entire unit of occupation even though the occupier carries on a variety of activities, it is not possible to say that one is incidental or ancillary to the other. In these instances, there would be a composite use where the component activities could fluctuate in their intensity from time to time but the different activities would not be confined within separate or physically distinct areas of land.
  3. Thirdly though, it was recognised that it may frequently occur that within a single unit of occupation, two or more physically separate or distinct areas are occupied for substantially different and unrelated purposes. In such a case, each area used for a different main purpose ought to be considered as a separate planning unit.
- 2.26 In this case the property will remain in one ownership and control and the single main use will remain as a one residential dwelling house.
- 2.27 Based on this information it is clear that the proposed mobile home will simply provide additional living accommodation for use by one family. This is consistent and indeed part of the primary residential dwelling house use, as such the property as a whole will remain as one planning unit with the single primary use as a dwelling house. The proposal does not therefore amount to a material change of use for planning purposes.
- 2.28 This assessment is consistent with a Secretary of State decision reported at page 144 in the Journal of Planning Law [1987], and as referred to in the Whitehead judgment (1992 JPL report copy Appendix 3) concerned the meaning of incidental. In that case, the Secretary of State's view was that the use of an existing building in a residential garden as a bedroom was not incidental to the use of the dwelling, but an integral part of the main use of the planning unit.
- 2.29 The following planning appeal decision are produced as Appendix 4 and 5. These support the methodology of the assessment undertaken in this report.

2159970: 4 Waterwork Cottage Redricks Lane, Sawbridgeworth: East Hertfordshire DC.

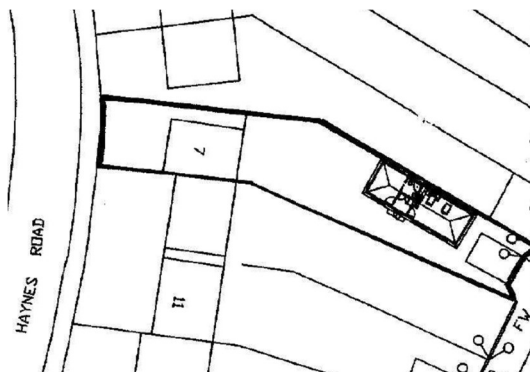

Whilst this case primarily addressed the issue of development in terms of construction and size, it is noted that the Council did not dispute that the mobile home would have facilities that enabled a degree of independent living and that the unit would in effect be a granny annexe. At paragraph 8 the Inspector confirms that the unit is a caravan therefore it would involve a use of land. As that use would be the same as the lawful use in the remainder of the planning unit it would not involve a change of use that requires planning permission.

Extract of LDC plan showing relationship to house and scale.

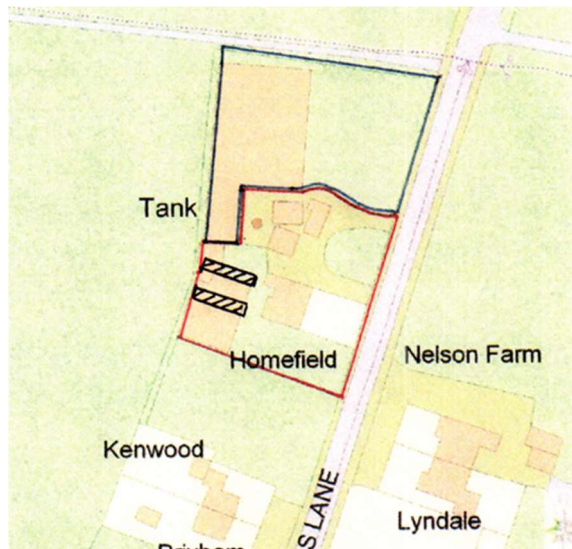

2190398: 7 Haynes Road, Northfleet, Gravesend: Gravesham BC

In this case the Inspector concluded that the use of a caravan (log cabin style) as a granny annexe would not amount to a change of use, see paragraphs 1, 2, 9 and 10. A LDC was issued for 'The stationing of a mobile home in the rear garden for use as a granny annexe'.

Extract of LDC plan showing relationship to house and scale.

- 2.30 In appeal decision 2109940 concerning Homefield, Moss Lane, Burscough, Ormskirk an Inspector found that the siting of two number static caravans within the grounds of a house to provide sleeping accommodation for two adult sons and for social and entertaining purposes was found to provide additional accommodation to the main dwelling, and the use of the words 'incidental and subordinate' were not relevant. Costs were awarded to the appellants as the local planning authority had incorrectly assessed the proposal. The appeal decision, site plan and costs decision are contained in Appendix 6. Attention is drawn to paragraph 4 of the costs decision.

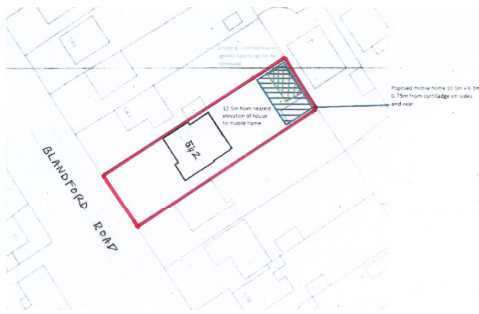

Extract of plan showing relationship of two units to the house

- 2.31 A further Appeal decision (2181651) concerned the provision of a log cabin type mobile home for staff accommodation at a site in Black Hills, Esher. On the evidence provided the Inspector concluded that 'given the clear functional link between the mobile home and the dwelling, and the ancillary and subordinate nature of the accommodation to be provided, the siting of a mobile home for the purposes described would not amount to a material change of use. Extract of the LDC plan with unit highlighted yellow below, copy of decision produced as Appendix 7.

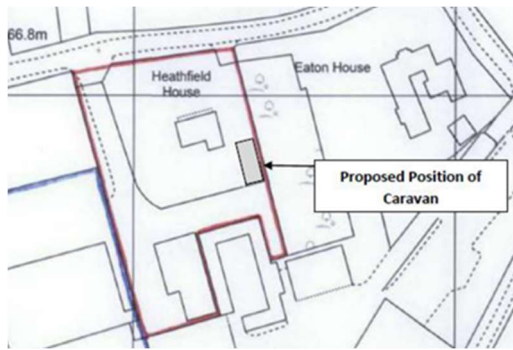

- 2.32 In addition, attention is drawn to the appeal decision (3142534) at Appendix 8, concerning a mobile home for use as a granny annex in the garden of a house in Poole. On the basis of circumstances that were very similar to this case the Inspector found at paragraph 20 that whilst the mobile home unit would have all the facilities for independent living, it would not be used in a manner independent from the main dwelling, and the use as described would be a use that comprised part and parcel of the primary dwelling house use which was already taking place within the planning unit. Further such use would not be incidental as it provided primary living space, and no change of use would occur.

- 2.33 Attention is drawn the appeal and costs decisions at Appendix 9 concerning a proposed mobile home in the rear garden of a property in Chelmsford (3151073). This decision confirms that in applying the ‘balance of probabilities test’ the information originally provided with the application was sufficient for it to be concluded that the siting of the unit for residential use as part of the single household was lawful at the time the application was made (para 17). Additional information submitted after the application was validated (such as detailed structural calculations from the supplier and a written statement from the future occupier) was not necessary to reach this conclusion. An award of the full costs of the appeal was made against the LPA. As the agent for that application and appeal I can confirm the information was commensurate to that provided with this application.

- 2.34 A further appeal and costs decision against the refusal by Colchester Borough Council to issue a LDC for a caravan for use as additional accommodation is produced at Appendix 10 (3177321). The Inspector notes that while the Council concluded that the caravan ‘is highly likely to be capable of independent occupation’ that is not what was applied for and the evidence was that it was to be used as additional accommodation. As this was what had been applied for, this is what the LPA should have been tested. The LDC for a caravan for use as additional accommodation was granted on the basis that it would not constitute development, and full appeal costs were awarded in favour of the appellant.

- 2.35 In addition to the above appeal decision two previous LDC issued by the LPA are produced in Appendix 11 (ref 21/01291/LDCP & 20/00348/LDCP). It should be noted that one was for a 'Keops' mobile home, the same supplier as in this case. The issue of the LDC as applied for would be entirely consistent with these previous decisions.

Consideration of an Incidental Use

- 2.36 In addition to the planning unit based assessment above, which we rely on as the correct assessment methodology in this case, S.55(2)(d) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (the Act) provides that any use incidental to a residential use within the curtilage of the dwelling is not development for planning purposes.
- 2.37 There is case law on what can reasonably be considered as an incidental to the use of a dwelling house. The Courts have determined that a degree of reasonableness has to be applied when deciding what is incidental. The word incidental is not defined in the Town and Country Planning Act, so its normal dictionary definition is used. The Oxford dictionary defines incidental as something which is minor to the main thing/event.
- 2.38 The Courts have looked at the question of whether a building (not a mobile home) that is substantially larger than the original dwelling house is incidental to the original dwelling house and determined that if it was so large it may no longer be incidental or ancillary [Eagles v Min of Environment and Welsh Assembly 2009 EWHC 1028].
- 2.39 However, in this case the proposed twin unit mobile home (floor area 106 sq m) is relatively small and is subordinate in scale to the two storey 5 bedroom accommodation in the main dwelling (GIA circa 440 sq m) also the proposed use comprises the same use as the host dwelling (applying the Court's reasonableness test). The proposal will not create a separate dwelling and the unit will function as additional accommodation for the main dwelling.
- 2.40 Although we rely on the assessment that the provision of primary accommodation is part and parcel of the main dwelling house use, and as such it is not a material change of use or an incidental use, if that analysis is not accepted it is clear that the proposed use would be incidental to the main use of the land as a residential dwelling and would not, in any event, constitute development.

3. Conclusion

- 3.1 The proposal is for a twin unit mobile home structure that complies with the legal definition of a caravan, therefore providing the unit on the land would not result in operational or built development.
- 3.2 It is clear that the proposed occupation and use of a mobile home by family members, who are already resident in the main house, as part of the existing single residential planning unit would comprise an integral part of the primary lawful residential use. This is the conclusion of our assessment which is consistent with the relevant case law and appeal decisions provided.
- 3.3 Alternatively, the accommodation may be considered incidental / supplementary to the main use of the land as a residential dwelling. The scale of the proposed twin unit mobile home is also subordinate to the main dwelling and as such would not result in a material change of use or the subdivision of the planning unit.
- 3.4 In either assessed conclusion above the proposal does not result in a material change of use or development within the definition at S.55 of the Act.
- 3.5 The proposed hard standing benefits from deemed consent pursuant to Schedule 2, Part 1, Class F of the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 2015. If the LPA is not content with this assessment, it is open to them to issue a split decision. In such circumstances the proposed twin unit mobile home would then be sited on pad stones, which are de minimis.
- 3.6 It is therefore concluded that based on this clear and unambiguous submission that a Lawful Development Certificate should be issued in accordance with the terms of the application. This is consistent with previous decisions of the LPA as produced in Appendix 11.

List of Appendices:

- 1. Appeal decision 1074589 (Erewash Borough Council)
- 2. A certificate of conformity with the legislative limitations from the supplier
- 3. Whitehead judgment 1992 JPL
- 4. Appeal decision 2159970, LDC and plan (East Hertfordshire DC)
- 5. Appeal decision 2190398, LDC and plan (Gravesham BC)
- 6. Appeal decision 2109940 LDC and costs (West Lancashire DC)
- 7. Appeal decision 2181651 and LDC (Elmbridge DC)
- 8. Appeal decision 3142534 and LDC (Borough of Poole)
- 9. Appeal decision 3151073, LDC and Costs Decision (Maldon DC)
- 10. Appeal decision 3177321, LDC and Costs Decision (Colchester BC)
- 11. Previous LDCs issued by the LPA ref 21/01291/LDCP & 20/00348/LDCP