Description	Reasons for Designation Walsoken War Memorial, erected in the early C20, is designated at Grade II for the following principal reasons:

* Historical interest: it is a moving reminder of the impact on the community of two World Wars and of the sacrifice suffered;

* Design: its design is powerful and moving and it occupies a prominent place in the churchyard and the community.

History

The War Memorial at Walsoken was erected by public subscription following the First World War, with a panel added after the Second World War to commemorate six casualties, four of whom died in Japanese prisoner of war camps. In 1998 the memorial was vandalised, but has been fully repaired.

Details

War Memorial, First and Second World Wars.

The Walsoken war memorial is made of red granite and consists of the statue of a soldier carrying a rifle, facing forward but with his body turned to one side, raised above a tall, slightly tapered, square section pedestal with rusticated rough hewn quoins and top stone, and with two courses of similar stones to the base. These frame the panels on which the names of those who died in the First World War are inscribed, 118 altogether. The pedestal stands on a three stepped base; a small tablet inscribed with the six names of those who died in the Second World War is set against the top step.

Description	FINDSPOT (Unknown date) WATERCOURSE (Unknown date) FINDSPOT (Roman - 43 AD to 409 AD)

Fieldwalking in 1982 and 1983 by the Fenland Survey recovered a general scatter of Roman pottery sherds from across this field. In addition, a concentration of Roman pottery and some medieval sherds was noted on the south side of a roddon. The Roman sherds were identified as predominantly 4th century in date. Another concentration of Roman pottery sherds with some animal bone fragments was noted in a lower section near to a medium roddon.

October 1982.

Context 2: at 5161 1065. On south side of roddon. Scatter of Roman pottery around 20m diameter. Some of the material from Context 2 has been reidentified as medieval.
R. Silvester (NAU), October 1982.

Additional pottery collected and area defined by slightly greyish-brown silt against general orange brown silt of roddon.

About 5 ft (1.5) OD.

A. Gregory (NAU), identifies as predominantly late. Reasonable mixture of types one would expect in 4th century in West Norfolk.

R. Silvester (NAU), 29 October 1982.

21 October 1983. Field rewalked and material collected.

Area is around 47m northwest to southeast by 53m northeast to southwest. Material spreads on top of roddon. Small amount of bone.

Context 1: Good conditions, under winter wheat. General scatter over field of pottery, mainly Roman. Includes six sherds from very small area.

Context 3: at 5175 1077. Ground weathered & dry- ideal conditions. Concentration of Roman pottery at 6 ft (1.8m) OD with small amount animal bone. No obvious soil discolouration but ground too dry and covered with winter wheat. Set in central slightly lower part of medium roddon between two levees.

FINDSPOT (Medieval - 1066 AD to 1539 AD)

26 November 1982. On field surface.
Odd sherd, medieval?
Identified by R. Silvester (NAU) November 1982.

R. Silvester (NAU) November 1982.
30 November 1982.
Second visit showed part of medieval scatter and red brick-like fragments, tentatively identified as medieval briquetage by D. Hall.

Distinct concentration on south side medium roddon covering area about 30m northeast to southwest x 20m, although fragments of briquetage and occasional sherds much more widely spaced to north probably through plough spread.
Identified by D. Hall and R. Silvester (NAU) December 1982.

R. Silvester notes that he later reidentified briquetage as simply pieces of brick. One is medieval roof tile - A. Rogerson (NAU).
E. Rose (NAU) 5 January 1987.

Some of the material found has been reidentified as quern fragments.

Description	FINDSPOT (Roman - 43 AD to 409 AD) Finds in 1983 of large quantities of Roman pottery and brick fragments between two infilled waterways indicate a probable settlement site. 7 March 1983. Quite a large Roman site or two and infilling the gap between two converging roddons. Pottery and briquetage in quantity. Some bone and also some tile (modern?). Pottery under winter wheat, partly freshly planted and harrowed. 110m west to east by 60m north to south maximum at 7 to 8 feet OD. Important because still ploughed during last three years only. Previously permanent pasture. Accounts for large size of pot fragments. R. Silvester (NAU), March 1983. For full details of wares, flint types etc see Fenland Folders It seems probable that this is inaccurately marked on the NHER map; the site is probably

slightly to the south, due to the use of the provisional series 6 inch Ordnance Survey which does not show the large barn that crosses the site as marked, though that has been there since 1973

(see 1:10,000 Ordnance Survey 1974).
